Introducing

BOSTON UNITED

The story so far...

Although it was 1934 before the name Boston United first appeared, football had been played in the town since the late 1800's and, indeed, always on the same site as the present York Street stadium.

In those early days there were two clubs - Boston Town, whose headquarters were 'The Coach and Horses', and Boston Swifts, who used 'The Whale' as their H.Q. In fact, as both the public houses were situated on 'Main Ridge' and the pitch was virtually just opposite, it wasn't surprising that for the first 40 years or so that was what the Ground was called. A small stand was erected in the early 1900's but other than that there were no other facilities, and the teams changed at the back of the appropriate pub! (They also retired there afterwards for a little longer...)

Swifts never reappeared after the First War and it was left to the Club called simply 'Boston' to achieve the first giant-killing in the F.A. Cup by beating the then powerful Football League Club Bradford Park Avenue 1-0 in 1925. The Club was now competing in the Midland League, whereas it's predecessors had played in the Lincoln League, local cups and friendlies - although Town had also entered the F.A. Cup prior to the turn of the century.

By 1933 lack of success and financial problems resulted in a Public Meeting being called in an attempt to sort things out and save the Club. Only one person showed any interest. That man rescued the Club and remained it's guiding hand for over half a century. His name was Ernest Mankinson. The Club was reformed under the new title Boston United and the town's colours of Amber and Black replaced the White and Blue.

By this time, with entrances and dressing-rooms at the west end of the Ground it was known as 'Shodfriars Lane' - and still is by some older supporters. The Club still would find major success elusive - until 1955/6 when they finished as runners-up to Peterborough United in the Midland League, whilst in the F.A. Cup they travelled to Derby County and beat them 6-1. (This is still a record score by a non-league club against a League club on their own ground) It was at Spurs in the 3rd Round that a brave fight wasn't enough to stop them going out. Attendances at Boston at that time were averaging 5,6,000 for League games, and when floodlights were first used for the visit of Corby Town in 1955 over 12,000 people were in the ground!

In search for more honours, and a Football League place, United joined the Southern League for the 1957/8 season, finishing third. A mid-table position was all that was gained the next year, whilst the following season saw them rock bottom and they resigned and spent 1960/61 in the Central Alliance - completing a League and Cup 'double'. The next season they re-joined the 'new' Midland League but by 1964 financial problems were at such a point they were forced to resign and to keep the Club name alive whilst they sorted themselves out, they ran an amateur side in the local league during 1964/5.

Season 1965/6 saw the start of the climb back to senior non-league football with a United Counties League and Cup 'double'. Refused entry back into the Midland League in 1967 they became something of an oddity by being an east coast Club playing in the West Midlands League! The travelling didn't seem to bother them as they won the Championship both years and the League Cup as well in the second year.

1968 saw United as founder-members of the newly-formed Northern Premier League and the start of an 11-year period in which all kinds of honours were won and records were set.

Only twice were they not involved in the Championship race, winning it a record four times. (They were the first club ever to win a N.P.L. 'treble' of League, Cup and Shield). The League Cup was won twice, the N.P.L. Shield four times and the Non League Champions of Champions Trophy twice.

United also created a record of conceding only 3 goals at home in league games in a whole season, 51 consecutive home and away league games without a defeat, and 64 home league games (over 3 years!) without a defeat. During this period a number of F.A. Cup triumphs over Football League opposition were gained and, notably, a return to the Baseball Ground in 1974 when they held the then European Champions Derby County to a 0-0 draw. The replay saw 11,000 spectators at York Street, by which name the ground was now known, and Derby through with few problems.

United received a huge body-blow in 1977 when Football League inspectors failed the Ground as being suitable for the Football League, and although United finished as N.P.L. Champions yet again, runners-up Wigan Athletic were put forward instead and were elected.

The United directors unanimously agreed that this must never happen again, and so commenced the vast undertaking of rebuilding virtually the whole of the York Street Ground, launching new fund-raising schemes in 1978. The local population backed them incredibly, and new floodlights, stands, toilets, turnstiles, terracing and snackbars turned York Street into the super stadium it now is, recognised as the best in non-league football.

It has taken United over ten years and the equivalent - at today's prices - of over £3 million and they still haven't finished as proven by the fact that now the Ground even boasts emergency lighting all round. It is one of the few in the country to do so.

Unfortunately, with priorities being centred off the field, memorable events as regards the playing side have been few and far between since United joined the Alliance Premier League in 1979 as founder-members and fourth place is the highest they have managed, and that was in their first season.

The highest point they have enjoyed was most certainly in 1984/5 when they celebrated 50 years by reaching Wembley in the F.A. Trophy Final. Although they went down fighting 2-1 to Gola League Champions Wealdstone, there were over 12,000 Boston supporters that day in the crowd of 22,092. About 5,000 of which turned out again the next day to welcome the team back to Boston. United have now changed their priorities and they are attempting to gain the honours which must culminate in a Football League place, if their ambition is to be realised, and their supporters justly rewarded.

GEORGE KERR'S COLUMN

Football is often said to be a funny game but I doubt if Mrs. Robson, wife of the England Manager, would agree at this time and certainly it has been very cruel to many people who over the years have given everything to it in Jock Stein's case his very life.

However, it does throw up many situations that do make us chuckle and one such incident happened last week against Welling. John Blackwell was heard to shout out to Gary Simpson to get stuck in, adding that the club doctor was with us should Gary be unfortunate enough to get injured.

We all remember incidents where dogs have run onto the field our hare against Macclesfield - and I remember an incident at Market Rasen one Sunday morning when I was playing with Lincoln's City Youth team where a horse bolted amongst the players.

All these incidents, I am quite sure, helped bring a bit of humour into the games making players and spectators relax, if only for a brief moment.

In my opinion, football has become far too serious to the detriment of those involved both on the playing side and those who spectate. Football, I have always believed, relates to life and there is no doubt in my mind that the game, and those who play and watch it, have become very vicious with their attitudes.

Let me put it another way, all these newspaper reporters who are calling for Bobby Robson's head at this time will be members of a trade union - likewise a fair few supporters - and somebody ought to remind them that Bobby Robson is also in the Football League Managers' Union, all brothers together related by the T.U.C. The question should be asked "when did it become the policy of trade union members to create a situation where they played an active part in the removal of a fellow union member from his job".

Relating to our position where we have gained twenty-one points from twelve games, it should be noted that we are doing as well as Manchester City and better than Leeds United, Chelsea, Stoke, Sunderland, etc.

I saw in our performance last week, despite the defeat, many things that were very encouraging for the future, so let's support our players today and remember it's only a game of football no matter what level we are playing at.

Thank you for your support, it is very much appreciated by all of us.
Regards, George.
